A Short Sketch of the celebrated Philosophical Letturer, HENRY MOYES, M. D. as extracted from

" Dr Mores undoubtedly is a man of the most. fingular and capacious endowments, when the great natural defect under which he labours, of being to-tally blind from infancy, is confidered. All scientific characters of reputation allow him to be most intimately acquainted with, if I may use a figure, the grand miltrefs of science, viz. Chemistry, and with all the vast train of abstruce, though subordinate all the vast train of abstruse, though subordinate sciences, that she necessarily has to attend her in all has actions and intricate researches after trath, which she frequently meets with. In a word, his genus, talents, and philanthrophy have secured to him the title, above all regal honours, of being a true philosopher, though probably not of that class which into a Newton or a Locke. Yet, if those sublime characters had been obliged, while traversing through their immense tracts of philosophy and disquistion, to surmount the obstacles which the former has, it is an equal query whether iointly they would have an equal query whether jointly they would have formed a Moyes."

We learn from Port Audemer the following fingular effect of a thunder ftorm on the 10th of July 1. After having grumbled for the space of an hour, without any rain, ir fell on a person who was on horseback in a neighbouring meadow. The man and horse were killed; the lightning struck the man near the ear, and carried off the hair on that side as with a razor. The rest of the hair was scorehed ; the eye lids and eye-brows burnt; the breast broke. It appeared that the lightning had followed the line of the body on one fide, and puffed through one of the shoes, the sole of which was torn off, fpot on the foot, as if it had been burnt by a iron. The man's clothes, which were very good, were torn to pieces, and spread about twenty paces round. His watch was stopped on the stroke of two, the enamel of the plate broken, the glass melted, the box shattered as if by a hammer; the horse he rode had only a flight scorching above the withers. Out of thirty men who worked in the fame meadow, fifteen were knocked down without any other damage; one of them into a ditch, where he would have been loft but for the timely affiliance of his companions.

L O N D O N, Aug. 17. Sequel of the Royal Vifit to Oxford.

On Monday their Majesties, with the Royal suite, paid a visit to his Grace the Duke of Marlborough, at. Blenheim. They passed through Oxford about ten o'clock; and at a mile from Woodstock, were met by the principal inhabitants, with drums beatmet by the principal innabrants, with drims beating, colours flying, &c. who conducted them through Woodfock to the grand portal where they entered the park, and had the first view of Blenheim Castle.
Their Majesties were highly delighted with the grandeur of that noble structure, and the beautiful seenery of the park and gardens afforded them much entertainment. They continued in the house upwards of two hours, viewing, with great attention, the elegant tafte and magnificence of the furniture, pictures, &c. and partook of a cold collation in the ibrary; then rode round fuch part of the park as their time admitted, and much admired the very pacious and grand piece of water, on which boats were placed, which had on board bands of martial and out music. Their Majesties left Blenheim about its velock, expressing the great satisfaction they had received in their vist.

In the evening there was a general illumination at Oxford, with bells ringing, fire-works, and every other demonstration of joy.

During the Royal visit to Oxford, the honour of knighthood was conferred by his Majesty on Charles Yesterday, their Majesties and the five Princesses returned from Oxford to Windfor.

Yesterday, being the birth-day of his Royal Highness the Duke of York, his Majesty's second fon, who enters the 23d year of his age, the fame was observed by their Majesties at Windsor.

The King is fo well convinced that he lives in the hearts of his people, and that every subject he has, who is in his senses, looks upon him as a father, that notwithstanding the late attack upon his perfor, he continues to go about the country, with-out arrendants or chards. File Majaly, he will pen carriage with three rows of feats, which can accommodate feven of eight perfons : in this carriage he every fine evening takes out the Queen and fome of the Princesses; and he himself being the chario-teer, drives from Windsor to Kew and about Richmond, on visits to the Duke of Montagu and others of the nobility. A coach and four and a couple of fervants generally precede him, but at the distance of about half a mile; this is for the accommodation of the Royal travellers in case of rain. In this manely drove through Richmo nefday night, just as the moon was beginning to fline.

Last night and this day it was confidently reported, that the Great Frederick, King of Prusha, had departed this life; and one of the papers of this morning goes fo far as to fay, that an express arrived yesterday at the Secretary of State's Office, with advice that he died on Friday last. Many, however, are inclined to consider this report merely as an invention of the gentlemen in the Alley, where, in conjunction with the circumstance of a large sum being fold yesterday out of the funds, it had some small effect over the Stocks, which it lowered one half. But the last advices from the Continent do not by any means feem to confirm it, all our latest accounts from Berlin giving the most favourable accounts of their excellent monarch's health, which they reprefent as much better than it has been for a confider-

The Flanders mail also, which is just this moment arrived, mentions not a word of it.

By the Hague Gazette, of the 11th of August, which arrived yesterday, we are assured, that on the 1st instant, the treaty of commerce between the King of Prussia and the United States of America, which had fo long been in suspense, was concluded between Baron Thulemeyer on the part of the Prusfrom monarch, and Dr Franklin, with Mess. Adams and Jefferson, on that of the Congress.

The general purport of the above treaty is similar to most others of a commercial nature, but there are fome provises in it highly worthy the attention of mankind. The contracting parties agree, that in case any power goes to war with either, they shall continue a free commerce with the enemies of each s but shall not act, either by commission or letter of marque, in favour of fuch enemies, under the penalty of being treated as pirates.

There is another clause in this new compacts which does honour to humanity. It is agreed by both parties, that in case of any unforestern rupeurs between them, which may hereafter produce hastileties, " that no women, children, men of letter farmers, artifans, and fishermen, who are not found in arms; and those who live in unfortified cities, towns, and villages; in thore, all those whose vaca; tion tends to the sublistence and general good of the human race, shall have liberty to continue their respective profeshons, and remain unmolested in their persons and property." -- " But if, as it may sometimes happen in carrying on the barbarous trade of war, any houses or goods belonging to persons of the above description should be burnt, or otherwise destroyed by the enemy, or their fields ravaged, or they should be obliged from necessity to give up any part of their property, the full value of it shall be repaid them, upon a claim being made on the state whose troops or seamen were reduced to adopt such inimical measures."

A third article, equally benevolent, obliges the contracting powers to protect all merchant thips not employed in carrying ammunition, acc. should a war happen between them; and that nothing hall be done on either fide to destroy or even interrupt the freedom of commerce.

When the measure of establishing a paper currency in Rhode-Island was carried in the Assembly, the majority by whom it was effected were to much out of cash, says a private letter from the state, that they could not raife money fufficient to buy paper to print the votes upon; and the plan was fo difliked by the people, that not a man would trust them. In this manner flood the matter, when some new adventurers from England arrived, one of whom had fortunately a few reams of paper in his flore, which he exchanged for rum and fugar, articles the affembly men happened to be able to raile; and the island is now to have a paper currency, liable to the depreciation of the present ruling powers. This is one of the blessed effects of their darling independent dency.

It is an indiffurable truth, we have that about two millions of property, shipped to that country fince the peace, have been under commissions of

By the Deptford we have received the following form of thunder and lightening happened in the neighbourhood of Seringapatam, the capital of the late Tippoo Saib's dominions. During the florm a very large magazine was struck by lightening, which immediately took fire, and spread so rapidly, that one third of the town was confumed before any effectual affiltance could be given. The diffres secasioned by this difafter is inconceivable. Many of the inhabitants were burnt before the alarm was given ; and many others threw themselves among the flames brough despair; rather chusing to end their existence than survive the loss of their relations and

The Directors of the East India Company are now feriously employed in making the necessary arrangements for completing a plan which has long been in agitation and under confideration of the Court, viz. The opening a trade from Chast to the Russian dominions of Kamschatka. The ressels to be employed on this fervice, are to be from three to four hundred tons burthen only; to carry belides the Captain and other necessary officers, from twenty to thirty, or at most forty seamen and boys. The in-tention of this trade is to supply a batter for Chinese goods, in order to prevent such large sums in fpecie being fent out every year from this country, whereby the nation is drained of its circulating eash, as it is but seldom that either the gold or silver sent out thither comes back to Europe. Solyman the Magnificent was a turban maker. Ofman III. who was killed in $614, was a very expert cutler, and Mustapha IV, within the present century, was an excellent sadler. The Circassians, the Georgians, the Dagesthans, who are beyond all comparison the handsomest people on the face of the earth, and very powerful, educate the heir apparent in the following manner: When the Khan's principal lady is in labour, the first Circasfian man who gets notice of it places himfelf at the door of the haram, or house, where the women are When he has once taken his station, no other Circassian dares deprive him of it; when the lady is delivered, fome old fervant woman is fent to the gate to declare to the Circassians, that the Khan's wife is delivered either of a fon or a daughter; if a fon, the child, being richly dreffed, is brought to the gate, and delivered to the Circassian, whose right it is by their law; he carries the infant to his house, provides a nurse for him, and educates him as his own child, until he acquires the age of nine or ten years; then he is restored to his parents, at which time they have great rejoicings. The reabe brought up hardily, and become a buggateer, or hero, the only character which creates efteem among those warlike people.

Every arrival from America furnishes us with fresh symptoms of the actual disunion of those confederated states. It appears by the latest advices from the fouthward, that on account of fome mif understanding, or from some idea of rivalship be-tween North and South Carolina, the Governor of the former had prohibited the exportation of corn, and thereby stopped an abundant channel of supply to the latter; in confequence of which that article had rifen to the extravagant price of a s. and 8 d. sterling per bushel, at Charlestown. To the north ward we discover evident marks of a similar jealousy in the erection of the free ports. Connecticut has New Haven; and New Jerfey, not fatisfied with Amboy, has lately passed an act for endowing with the like privileges Paulus Hook, an inconfiderable village on the fouth fide of Hudson's river, opposite to New York, a port infinitely better adapted to all the purposes of commerce, and therefore the object of their envy. In fuch circumstances, it does not require the eye of a philosopher to discover that enmities must sooner or later arise, as invete rate as ever difgraced any two rival states in the old st By the packet received from the East Indies, it is certain, that very favourable accounts are given of the flate of affairs ; but this mult be understood with respect merely to the bond-debts of the Company, and their civil and military establishments, in both of which such prodigious savings have been made, as to enable their servants to take the former had from war has been most happily suited. But it is not the fact, that either the Europeans or natives and the fact, that either the Europeans of natives are better pleased than they were with the mode of ment, and that the people were only quiet but from the hope of having what they considered as grievances redressed by the new Governor, which they expected foon from England, no thoughts being entertained there that Mr Macpherson would be considered as Governor of Bengal tirued as Governor of Bengal.

"The East India Company have lately made a regulation that bids fair to strike at the root of a very formidable branch of fmuggling, and add very confiderably to the encrease of the public revenue. Inflead of allowing their commanders of shipping, their mates, gunners, carpenters, &c. a certain pro-portion of private trade, they have augmented their pay, and allowance for their table. In both inflanpay, and anowance for their table. In both inflan-ces they have acted with great liberality; but the pay and table was never their object. The great e-moluments of the voyage arose from the private trade they were allowed. The commander had twenty they were allowed. The commander had twenty tous for his privilege, and the other officers in proportion, and this used to enable them to smuggle a great deal more. In suture it will be hardly possible, even for a Captain, to clear, by an East India voyage, more than a thousand pounds, whereas commanders have frequently been known to make from eight to fifteen times the money. This new regulation owes its rife to the Board of Controul and though it will greatly help the revenue, it at once defroys the value of all naval fituations in the Company's service.
The Minister has made a very considerable pro-

The Minister has made a very confiderable progreds towards a completion of his favourite plan for confolidating the Excise and Cuttoms, for which he shopes to derive much reputation. It will not only tend, it is faid, to reduce the expences of both establishments very considerably indeed, but also enable the officers and clerks to expedite the business in a manner that will as much excite the attention ment, as it will suit the convenience of the merchant and the resides.

Died at Dunnipace, on the 16th instant, Mis Euphan Sponifwood.

This day, came on before the High Court of Jufliciary, the trial of Archibald Cullings journeyman wight, indicted at the instance of his Majesty's Adwright, indicted at the instance of his Majesty's Advocate, for having, in the evening of the 3d of June last; februiously assaulted and wounded Eupham Deaholm; his own wife, with a knife, razor, or other deadly weapon, in the hands, face, and throat, to the great effusion of her blood, and imminent danger of her life. Mr John Wylde, as counsel for the pannel, objected to the libel, on account of the word feloniously being used in it; and contended, that though the word was well known in the law of England. Yet it was not a trobanical term known in the law of Scotland, and a Jury of this southers mult be supposed quite ignorant of its meanknown in the law of Scotland, and a jury of this country must be supposed quite ignorant of its meaning. If it was to be understood in the same sense it was held, in our neighbouring country, the libel would go the length, if found proven; to infer a capital punishment; but the other parts of the indictment shewed plainly, that this was not the indictment shewed plainly, that this was not the indictment shewed plainly, that this was not the indict mean as shewed in the prosecutor himself. He therefore was as shewed in the prosecutor himself. fore was of opinion, that, in order to avoid the abfurdity which the retaining this word would involve, should be struck the crime charged would be sufficiently plain, which was neither more por less than an assault and battery. He was supported by Mr Allan Macconochie, who proposed, that, as i e had no doubt the Court would find the libel relevant, their Lordships should ronounce a special interlocutor, explanatory of the pronounce a special intersection, specific indictment, so as the Jury might know the precise meaning of it.

The Lord Advocate answered these gentlemen. He appealed to the uniform records of the Court ig the word complained of: That it was a well known word in the law of Scotland: That there could scarce be an indistment pointed out in which it did not occur; and his Lordship contend. ed, that it could in no eafe be more properly applied than in the present. The argument set up by the counsel for the pannel, that the crime with which he was charged could only be confidered as an affault and battery, his Lordship could by no means, allow to have any folidity in it. prisoner at the bar had done every thing in his power to take away the life of his wife. By the providence of God, indeed, the still was in existence; but the had been so barbarously used as to be rendered destitute for life. The Gentlemen had likewife complained, that the conclusions of the in different did not support using the word feloniously. Tus, his Lordship observed, he did not expect to northern University.

hear from that fide of the bar. He had purposely hear from that hie of the bar. He had purposely avoided libelling for a capital punishment, owing to the woman's being still alive, though he had no difficulty of pleading before their Lordships; that he would have been well warranted in going that length; considering the horrid circumstances of the case; and he had it even yet in his power to do so, by deferring the diet against him, incarcerating him by deferring the diet against him, incarcerating him upon a new warrant, and serving him with a fresh indictment to-morrow, libelling him capitally.

Their Lordships afterwards delivered their opinions at considerable length; in which they entirely coincided with what was advanced by the Lord Advocate, and pronounced the usual, interlocutor, restricting the libel, upon his Lordship's consent, to an arbitrary punishment.

The jury was then chosen, when Mr Macconochie informed the Court, that the pannel had something to say. He was accordingly called upon for that to fay. He was accordingly called upon for that purpofe, when he read a few lines from a paper, purporting, that he was guilty of the crimes char-ged in the libel; but that they were committed without premeditation; that he was fineerely forry for them; and in order to prevent taking up the time of the Court, threw himself upon their mercy.

The Lord Advocate could not consider this as a fufficient acknowledgment of guilt, because the pan-nel had, in a manner, pled both guilty and not guilty, by allowing the truth of one part of the indict-ment, and denying the other. His Lordship there-fore insisted upon going on with the proof, which being sinisted, his Lordship summed up the evidence or the part of the Crown, as did Mr. Macconochie for the pannel. Lord Effgrove, who prelided upon this occasion, then delivered a very able and learned charge to the Jury, who were immediately after inclosed, and are to return their verdict to morrow mercian as a calculation. row morning at ten o'clock.

"Yesterday, a post-assembly was held at the Tholsel, when it was unanimously resolved upon to present an address to his Majesty, through the medium of his Grace the Lord Lieutenant, of congratulation for his escape from the attempt made upon his facred person by a frantic woman."

To the Printer of the Caledonian Mercury.

N looking at the adver ifements in your excellent paper, I observed, but not with furprife, that there is a violent dispute among the Professors of a man series

These Centemen do not think sit to rell us the cause of their dispute, except, in general, that it is concerning the union of their Colleges. Now, as the forming of seminaries for the education of youth is a subject of great and universal importance, as the disputants have appealed to the public; and as they do not let us know their feveral motives, furely I ama full liberty to suppose, that the projected union arises from those causes which have commonly nion arifes from those causes which have commonly prevailed in human nature.

Without riaking any reflections, then, upon any of these Genderium, or upon any individual in any College in Scothard, is it not natural to suppose, that this upon is projected in order to encrease the fataries, the special of the Professor, or in order to encrease the patronage arising to them from the management of the College revenues? For it is hardly to be smagnied, and they have not faid, that it is in order to render the mode of education more perfect, and so to produce an advantage to their country. and so to produce an advantage to their country.

My reasons for thinking so I will give you in the stortest manner; and you will be pleased to observe that they are saits.

In the Universities on the Continent, where the Professor side with large, permanent staries, the Professors either do little or nothing, or the business is done by Curates. It is well known how Oxford and Cambridge are endowed; and the aliduity and labour with which the students are inaliduity and labour with which the students are in-firucted at these two places need not be mentioned. Accordingly, it is so far from being fashionable to be learned, that there has not been one literary club in them for these hundred years, though there are ma-ay for called purposes. In Scotland, the Professors, who have been the greatest organients to their country, have had small salaries; and, at this moment, wherever there is a great salary, the Professor who enjoys it either gives no lectures at all, or gives only a part of what he ought to give by statute, or the business is done by a substitute.

when Queen Caroline procured the office of Afironomer Royal to the celebrated Dr Halley, and fironomer Royal to the celebrated Dr Halley, and faid to him, "That the was forry the falary was not greater," the Doctor replied, "Your Majesty's condefection towards me is very great; but God forbid that the falary should ever be made large, for then it will not be given to a man of metrit, but to a hungry courtier, or to the cousin of a Lord."

If the union that is proposed is meant to encrease the power of the Professors, surely every thing should be done to prevent it; for they ought to have no power but that of maintaining the good behaviour of the students during the lectures. Facts need not be cited in proof of this affertion. Within these two years, the whole country has been made acquainted.

the students during the lectures. Facts need not be cited in proof of this affertion. Within these two years, the whole country has been made acquainted by the newspapers with despotic acts in one of our Colleges, which were perfectly aftonishing, in the end of the eighteenth century.

If it is to give them patronage and business by managing College funds, we may observe, in the first place, that the more time is spent in that way, the less will be spent in the ends of their institution, that is, in the promotion of learning; and, in the second place, that they are perfectly unsit for such business. I need not prove this by a variety of examples. There is one existing at this moment, which I will mention, because it is diverting:—A certain College Kept their accompts directly contrary to their statutes, and to the principles of good administration; and their factor managed their revenue according to their orders. He, when worn out in their service, resigned; and they, for his faithful services, made him a present of a piece of plate, which not only glittered upon his table, but in all the newspapers of the kingdom. At the same time, when the honest old man tried to settle his accompts in the manner that his predecessors had done, they carried his cautioners before a court of law, and they are attempting to deprive him of what he considered his satisfactors. they are attempting to deprive him of what he confiders as his right, in confequence of their authority, and the practice of his predecessors. If there can be no inducement from these three motives to make an union of the Aberdeen Collemotives to make an union of the Aberdeen Colleges, there can be as little from the effect which the union will have by the destruction of rivaship, and the direction of College leaven.

The proved by the well-known histories of artificers, of painters, and of lystems of philosophy. Nay, Mr Printer, take a familiar illustration. When you make your next jount observe, that where there is but one inn, the provisions, and behaviour of the walters, are very different from what they are where there are two or more inns, where emulation proceeds the best dishes, and the most attentive servedus.

Were, accordingly, all our Universities united into one, which has been a project with fome thoughtless people, the bad consequences are divious. There would be an end to rivalship in good teaching. There would be an immense system of tyranny erected to and a student, when oppressed, would have no means of carrying on his education in a public

Still farther, if four fetmenting maffes were thrown into one, the fermentation would be exceffive, and of confequence no good bread would be brought to the market.

I have been often struck with this fermenting, I think they call it mephitic, air, in all Colleges, where the Profesfors live collegialiters It is so notorious abroad, that it is almost a proverbial faying, " The parties and intrigues at Court are trifling to those in a College." Such a general effect must arise from some general cause; and as it is connected with the present subject, and of importance to society, I will consider it in my next letter; hoping, in the moun time, that the Centlemen who are so zealous for the union of the Aberdeen Colleges, and who have called upon all ranks of men to support them, will be pleased to make their reasons known, that no injulice may be done them, by supposing motives that are ill founded. I am respectfully, Mr Printer, Your most obedient fervant,
